Dear Dr. Oster:

Thank you for your letter of February 15th and for the reprints of your work on the minding of acriflavine. Your techniques may ultimately prove to be of some value in our own program, though at the present instant their application would seem to be somewhat limited. I am nonetheless grateful to you for your interest as well as for the implied assurance that we have not overlooked other important work on this topic.

I will be happy for the opportunity to exchange reprints of future publications on this topic.

Yours very sincerely,

Joshua Lederberg
Associate Professor of Genetics
